My journeys on the night train between Inverness and London inspired me to write this book. I noticed the look that came into people’s eyes when I mentioned my weekly commutes and began to reflect on why the Highlands – and the idea of sleeping on a train as it speeds northwards through the night – hold such a mystique. I’d look at my fellow passengers with their bicycles, maps, guns, knapsacks, and matching luggage and realise that, for the majority, the North of Scotland means one thing: a sublime holiday paradise. Staring out at the empty hills, I’d ponder the history of the occasional turreted lodge as the train hurtled past and ask myself: who built these fanciful castles, and how did this complex, tortured, desolately beautiful land come to be invested with such glamour?

This morning I alight earlier than usual, disembarking at Kingussie as the mist rises from Creag Dhubh. The platform seems surprisingly long for a small village station, but then trains with as many as thirty-six carriages used to stop here during the sporting season. It’s 7:30 a.m. and there’s not a soul about as I head up the street in search of breakfast. I’m in the heart of Badenoch on my way to visit friends at a remote lodge, and the Duke of Gordon Hotel – a former coaching inn on the Great Highland Road – seems a good place to start the day. The receptionist regrets that “proper” coffee cannot be served until 11:00 in the Ghillie’s Rest, so I settle for the Highland Breakfast instead. The Balmoral Restaurant is a chatter with a coach party from Penrith. Beneath the heavily coffered ceiling, tall windows spill swags of rose-entwined tartan onto a tartan carpet. I’m rather taken by a cycle of nine large oil paintings done for the room in the 1930s. Tom Hutchison Peddie’s impressionistic canvases provide an excellent scene setter with their episodes from Macbeth and The Wolf of Badenoch, local views, and castles. The hotel is a curious hybrid – part mountain chalet, part baronial villa – but its interior oozes nostalgia for the Victorian Highland dream.

It takes the rest of the day to walk to the lodge, cutting deep into the Cairngorms along a series of increasingly remote glens. On the bank of the Feshie I rest beside a lone chimneystack – all that survives of the Duchess of Bedford’s romantic encampment where she cavorted with Landseer in the 1830s. I follow the Geldie Burn and stop to explore the ruins of Bynack Lodge. As the shadows lengthen, I breast Meall Chrombaig and finally catch sight of my goal: a former drovers’ inn tucked into a fold of hill at the end of a thirteen mile track. Soon, I’m soaking in a bath of peat brown burn water, then rucking into a salmon that was swimming in the Tilt an hour earlier. In a bedroom lined with matchboarding and faded chintz I fall asleep to the sound of the Feith Lair burn. Over the next few days we make long expeditions into the hills, picnic in heather, plunge into icy waterfalls, and sit late around the fire. A fifteen-mile walk down Glen Tilt gets me to Blair Atholl for the 10:30 sleeper, and by 9:00 the following morning I’m sitting at my London desk.

YOU SAY...

“Having been in the hospitality business for many years, when it comes to personal holidays my expectations are high, not only are they met but surpassed when I stay at Alladale Wilderness Reserve.”

Nick Shephard, Hedsor House

WE SAY...

The 23,000 acre Highland wildlife reserve of Alladale has a purpose - to restore the balance of nature in a wilderness area of Scotland.
The River Alness is one of the most picturesque salmon rivers in the Highlands, running for just 11 miles from Loch Morie into the Cromarty Firth with varied scenery throughout its length. The Novar Fishings offer six rotating beats; the average length of each being about a mile, with typically 15 to 20 named pools. There is a small run of spring salmon in May and June and good runs of salmon and grilse from July to the end of October. Annual river catches are typically in the range of 300-600 salmon and grilse, of which about two thirds are caught on the Novar waters. This is a hunter’s river, long casting is rarely needed and ‘rivercraft’ and persistence are generally rewarded. Great for beginners with typically 10-20 ‘first salmon’ caught each year.

YOU SAY...

“The Alness is one of the prettiest rivers I have ever fished on and everyone found it a delight to be there and to fish the water. We all enjoyed fishing the river and access is very good and well marked and we were supplied with very good maps. It was all very well organised.”

Anonymous

WE SAY...

If you are planning to stay at one of our houses in Easter Ross, we have salmon fishing on the River Alness to offer you. This beautiful, fast flowing river has one of the steepest descents in Scotland and produces good runs of salmon and grilse to tempt the novice or experienced angler.

'Over the sea to Skye'

Travel to Skye on the "Glenachulish", the last manually operated turntable ferry in Scotland
The Isle of Skye Ferry Community Interest Company owns and operates the last manually operated turntable ferry in existence (MV Glenachulish, 1969) which crosses from mainland Scotland to the Isle of Skye at the closest point between the two land masses, the original crossing to and from the island and part of an ancient drover’s route from the Hebrides to central Scotland where cattle were once swum across the narrow stretch.
In 2004 the then skipper of the ferry indicated he planned to retire in 2005. In the absence of a private buyer and little agreement locally about the best way to save the ferry, a group of enthusiasts managed to put together enough money to lease the boat in time for the 2006 summer season.

The company was formed in 2006 in an effort to preserve the service for the benefit of the local community.

In the ten years since the CIC has been in control, the company has seen year on year growth with an increase in turnover from £67k in 2007 to £190k in 2016. This success has allowed the company to undertake an extensive restoration programme on the MV Glenachulish, with generous support from the Glenachulish Preservation Trust (Skye Ferry Charity). These works included an overhaul of the original Kelvin T6 (180 hp) engine, removal and repair of the turntable mechanism (the first time it had ever been done), and complete replacement of the old wheelhouse with a brand new, state of the art version. Much care has been taken to retain the original appearance of the much loved and historically important ferry, of course. Returned to her original dark green livery in time for the 2017 season, Glenachulish has never looked better and has never been in such fine condition.

"Part of the charm of the ferry and the crossing is the unique experience it affords."

The ferry operates between Easter and October each year and during the season carries around 35,000 passengers, most of whom are visitors to this unique little corner of the West Highlands, where tourism is an important contributor to the local economy supporting local businesses and providing vital local employment. The ferry company itself provides jobs for 11 local people and supports a team of 14 volunteers who make refreshments for sale at the former Sandaig Lighthouse atop the Glenelg slipway. The Glenelg peninsula has a population 250, making the ferry a significant employer (paying a living wage) in this economically fragile area.

Part of the charm of the ferry and the crossing is the unique experience it affords. The Kylerhea Narrows, the challenging stretch of water where the ferry crosses, is home to a spectacular array of wildlife and provides an excellent viewing area for seals, dolphins, otters, and a huge variety of sea birds, not least the resident sea eagle (white tailed eagle), Victor; who makes regular appearances on the flood tide during the season.

The crew are all friendly, local people who ensure they provide the best experience, will point out wildlife and even make special detours for the best views. They can also deliver the best first hand knowledge of local tourist attractions (some you won’t find in the leaflets!)

The ferry itself, the spectacular scenery and abundant wildlife have attracted plentiful media interest as well. The ferry crossing provides an undeniably fascinating element to film and TV productions, such as TV shows: Hebrides: Islands at the Edge, Into the Wild (Dermot O’Leary and Gordon Buchanan), Five Celebs go Motorhoming (Cleo Rocos and Don Warrington), Wish You Were Here, Grand Tours of the Scottish Islands etc as well as appearances in various feature films, including the Hollywood success Maid of Honor (where senior skipper Donnie MacDonald has a ‘big screen’ moment!)

The ferry company is currently involved in a project to create a ‘Shore Station’ – at the car park above the Glenelg slipway. This small building will provide space for retail, refreshments, toilets, storage and an office as well as much needed local tourist information. This much needed facility will allow passengers travelling from Skye to stop, enjoy the views, have a cup of tea and discover some of the gems that can be seen on the Glenelg peninsula, Pictish Brochs (some of the best preserved anywhere), Jacobean Bernera Barracks, Gavin Maxwell’s Sandaig etc.

"The crew are all friendly, local people who ensure they provide the best experience, will point out wildlife and even make special detours for the best views."

FOCUS ON SCOTCH WHISKY

We asked Mark Thomson, Glenfiddich’s Brand Ambassador for Scotland, to help navigate us through the world of Scotch whisky.

> First things first, how is it made?

Scotch whisky is a distilled spirit made from fermented grain, and matured in wooden casks for three years or more. The flavour profiles of Scotch vary from region to region, giving consumers indications of the style of whisky in the bottle. However, we have noticed that these geographical indicators are being less reliable as distillers, such as our own Brian Kinsman, are getting more creative and experimenting more and more.

At Glenfiddich we play about with maturation and finishing. Finishing is when you pick up a fully matured whisky from one cask and transfer it to a secondary cask to influence the final part of its maturation. Our 12-Year-Old is made this way, blended with American ex-bourbon casks and European ex-sherry casks, and this creates a lovely balanced flavour.

Another example is our 21-Year-Old which is finished in a rum cask so you get a really nice sweet note coming through. Most recently as part of our Experimental Series we created the IPA Experiment with whisky finished in IPA casks – now that is something else.

> What’s the best way to drink Scotch?

For first-timers the advice I would give is to try and approach it with an open mind and shaking off any preconceived ideas you may have from your relatives or pop culture references. Have a try of the liquid, then think about adding water – some whiskies don’t need it, some do. If it is high strength, it may need a little bit softening, and will open up a little bit with water.

You’ll hear some whisky drinkers say, ‘you should never add this’ or ‘you should never do that’, there will always be that vein running through society. But the world is changing and I think those people will become a minority at some point. I don’t think individuals stick to just one way and one way only especially with such a range of whisky characters out there, so I say go ahead and throw it in a highball cocktail, add ice or have it straight up.

> How do I find the whisky for me?

Your palate is your own and only you can decide which whiskies you like, and which ones you don’t. Whiskies are as individual as you, and distilleries create distinct characters, intended to be tasted by many people with many different tastes. You may find the Speyside malts more approachable as you begin your whisky journey – some bolder, spicy drams or peated (smoky) expressions can be a bit too much at first, but you never know ‘till you try. Place, time and even the food you’ve eaten before a dram will change the character as you try a whisky - so it’s a good idea to try it twice. Or maybe that’s just my excuse to have extra. >
What makes Glenfiddich different?

One of the key things that makes Glenfiddich special for me is that it's still family-owned. Throughout its history, it has always taken an approach to whisky making that has foundations firmly secured in tradition, whilst also allowing itself to be creative and try new techniques. For 20 years William Grant nurtured a dream to make the ‘best dram in the valley’, and with the help of his family, he achieved that vision. The results of this include being the first distillery to actively promote single malt outside of the UK and creating the process of finishing. His passion, determination and pioneering spirit continues to guide us as a company today.

“One of the key things that makes Glenfiddich special for me is that it’s still family-owned.”

Being family-owned allows us to have the freedom to play, and innovation has been key to our success. Our recent Experimental Series is a step away from the core range in a way that allows us to be far more accessible to new whisky drinkers, and appeals to those with a curious mind.

My perfect dram for a cosy night by the fireplace is...

Dependent on my mood. I have a very varied palate when it comes to whisky and will happily sit down with a friend and try something new from around the world - but if I was being pushed, I’d have to opt for our 1974 vintage. The first of our private vintage whiskies which wasn’t from a single cask and showcases the skill of Brian Kinsman marrying together four exceptional casks from the same year to create what I believe to be an outstanding example of Glenfiddich.
The Glenfiddich distillery, located in Dufftown, is one of the last independent distilleries in Scotland. When you visit, you’ll discover tall copper tuns, great wooden washbacks and stone-walled warehouses filled with earthy, aged aromas. On-site you will also find the Glenfiddich Distillery shop filled with a range of special gifts to take home, and the renowned Malt Barn restaurant & bar.

The Duchess -
a portfolio of success

The Duchess of Rutland is a stalwart custodian and the face of one of England’s most magnificent castles, settled high on a hill in the Leicestershire countryside overlooking the Vale of Belvoir. The castle gives an air of a fairy-tale existence which both captivates and entices admirers for miles around including overseas. The castle was given the French name Belvoir - meaning beautiful view and is pronounced ‘Beaver.’ >
One of the unique bedrooms inside Belvoir Castle.
Our family has lived at Belvoir for nearly 950 years and the estate has been passed down through 36 successive generations. I feel so very fortunate to be acting as a custodian for what is a short time in Belvoir’s many centuries of history – it really is a splendid historic home and estate. It is my delight to share its many treasures, its history and stories to enable future generations to enjoy and be part of it...

Emma, the Duchess of Rutland has lovingly restored many of the castle rooms with incredible authenticity and sympathetic historical knowledge and styles of Duchesses that came before her. This extends to the gardens where the Duchess has restored the ‘Old Capability Brown’ gardens.

Emma comments ‘What makes Belvoir special is that we open our doors to a castle that is also our home and we believe that sharing it is important and that it is our business to do so. We feel, that whatever your aim or reason for coming to visit or stay with us might be, we will always make it truly exceptional.

Our portfolio of fabulous places to stay does not just end at the castle, we have restored and refurbished Croxton Park our shoot lodge a few miles from the castle, offering clients a different type of stay. Croxton Lodge is settled in beautiful surroundings by a lake with a warm home from home feel, complimenting client’s experiences at the castle which are unique and more historical stays. Moscar Lodge, our new addition to the Belvoir Estate portfolio is located on the outstanding moorlands in all about 6,000 acres in the Peak District. Again, a spectacular lodge with family history going back to the 7th Duke and early pioneer of grouse shooting.

It really is a sensational time to be at Belvoir Castle or at one of our lodges and with new projects such as the Old Engine Yard due in Spring 2018, we can bring even more variety when visiting Belvoir all year round. Staying here has never been a more exciting and uplifting time with our totally bespoke and unique stays, tailor made to every possible weekend celebration, party, event or corporate business request.

Why did we choose George Goldsmith to cover our portfolio? Both of us have one common aim and that is to provide our clients with something outstanding, bespoke that creates memories which remain with us all.

Having stayed in one of The Goldsmiths portfolio properties in Scotland ‘Big House Lodge’ this magical experience in the Scottish Highlands demonstrated the synonymous connection with George Goldsmith and how easily these types of experiences can be replicated further south in beautiful Leicestershire countryside.

Why not stay with us on your way up to the thrilling Highlands and experience life in an English Castle or Lodge, all steeped in history with exceptional service and facilities.

It is an absolute delight to invite you to stay here at Belvoir Castle or our Lodge locations and take you on a journey of experiences you will find hard to put a price on.

Look out for Belvoir Castle, Croxton Park Lodge and Moscar Lodge in this brochure. Contact the team at George Goldsmith, who would be happy to discuss your requirements and book your stay.

This book gives an in depth history of Edinburgh rifle maker Alexander Henry. Born in 1818, he was apprenticed to Thomas Mortimer and subsequently set up on his own in 1852 at South St Andrew Street.

In 1860 he took out one of the most famous patents of the 19th century that created the extremely accurate Henry rifling. He invented a falling block action in 1865 that became the most popular and successful of all such actions.

In 1870 he gave his name to weapon of the British Army, the Martini-Henry rifle. His rifles were revered for their accuracy and his Dimensions Books contain thousands of orders from British and European royalty, the aristocracy, Indian Maharajahs and big game hunters. Alexander Henry died in 1894 and the business continued until 1950.

Mary Miers tells the story of how the Highlands were ‘reinvented’ by early tourists and appropriated as a holiday paradise for the rich. She explores the influence of the romanticised North on architecture and taste within the framework of a vividly portrayed social history that scotches many myths.

The book features breathtaking photographs from the Country Life Picture Library, as well as specially commissioned photographs and rare historic images, and is beautifully designed by Robert Dalrymple. But it's also the first serious study of a significant body of architecture that has hitherto been largely overlooked, and its eight chapters are full of fascinating information and scholarly research. Mary Miers is an architectural historian, writer and journalist whose previous books include The Western Seaboard and Highlands and Islands; an anthology of Poetry of Place. She commutes by the Caledonian Sleeper between her home in Ross-shire and the offices of Country Life, where she spends several days a week in her role as the magazine’s Fine Arts and Books Editor.
